

luxsi

BRIGHTER BOSTON

Night Lights in New Lebanon

The Future of Lighting

Light Justice

Yes New York City FABRIC OF OUR SOCIETY

designing lighting

LightStanza

LIGHT LENI SCHWENDINGER PROJECTS

PARALLEL

sourcery

This year was chock full, let's count it down and reflect back on all the things that happened in Luxsi-land:

12

K-12 activities including the Future City competition, Spark WV, West Virginia's 3rd Culineering Challenge, and a bunch of fun visits to classrooms!

11

Educational presentations, including AIA-accredited seminars and 2 sessions at the Society of Women Engineers's annual conference.

10

Webinars, workshops, and panels coordinated for the Business of Light. Stay tuned for next year's lineup full of valuable resources!

9

Other amazing teams whom I'm very grateful to work with!

8

Events and articles focused on sustainability in lighting - in partnership with Reflex, Parallel, Mindful Materials, and Designing Lighting, among others!

7

Award shows I participated in: This year I had the pleasure of hosting five IES Illumination Awards celebrations, and I got to help judge the DLFNY's inaugural Beacon Awards!

6

Collaborations with Women In Lighting + Design (WILD), like co-chairing the start-up Mentorship Program, collaborating with other sections, and helping get WILD on Wikipedia!

5

Articles co-wrote this year between IES's LD+A Magazine, Designing Lighting Magazine, and the IESNYC's "Fabric of our Society" column.

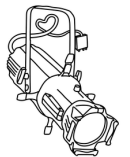

4

Advocacy organizations I'm proud to support as a board member, advisor, or workshop coordinator.

3

Experience-focused groups that work with students and the public to develop skills and raise awareness about lighting and related professions...maybe even inspiring future lighting designers!

2

Bonus honors/ego boosts: being a guest on the new Whelmed podcast, and having a set design nominated for a community theater award!

That leaves:

1

super-lucky-feeling lady...who's excited to see what 2025 will bring. Expect more to come on the Space Poppers front in particular...!

Thank you to everyone who helped make this year merry and bright!

xo
Sara

luxsi